

StandOut[®]

Your Results

The StandOut assessment measures how well you match 9 Roles and reveals your primary Role and secondary Role. These top two Roles are the focal point of all your talents and skills. They represent your instinctive way of making a difference in the world.

StandOut helps you accelerate your performance by showing you actions you can take to capitalize on your comparative advantage.

Your top two Roles may not be how you see yourself. Instead they capture how you show up to others. They pinpoint your recurring reactions and your behaviors. They are your edge at work.

The purpose of this report is to help you maximize this edge.

How to use it

- ▶ Understand how your top two Roles combine to reveal your Comparative Advantage.
- ▶ Learn the detail of your top two strength Roles, and your full Role rank order.

Your Greatest Value to the Team:

You're the kick in the pants that compels us to contribute our very best.

You are the coach who drives the team to win. You will never let us rest on our laurels. Certain of your faith in us, you'll keep pushing us to do better. "You really think this is the best you can do?!" But you're not simply cheering or scolding us from the sidelines. Instead you want to draw on your own expertise to help us. You are thrilled to be the one who offers us the secret trick, the new technique, or the mind-flipping insight that allows the penny to drop. We know you want us to learn, and we know you want us to act, and this combination is compelling. You really, really want us to win, and you'll never let us off the hook.

YOUR STRENGTH ROLES: RANK ORDER

THE 9 StandOut ROLES

ADVISOR

Advisors are practical, concrete thinkers who are at their most powerful when reacting to and solving other people's problems.

CONNECTOR

Connectors are catalysts. Their power lies in their craving to put two things together to make something bigger than it is now.

CREATOR

Creators make sense of the world, pulling it apart, seeing a better configuration, and creating it.

EQUALIZER

Equalizers are level-headed people whose power comes from keeping the world in balance, ethically and practically.

INFLUENCER

Influencers engage people directly and convince them to act. Their power is their persuasion.

PIONEER

Pioneers see the world as a friendly place where, around every corner, good things will happen. Their distinctive power starts with their optimism in the face of uncertainty.

PROVIDER

Providers sense other people's feelings, and they feel compelled to recognize these feelings, give them a voice, and act on them.

STIMULATOR

Stimulators are the hosts of others' emotions. They feel responsible for them, for turning them around, for elevating them.

TEACHER

Teachers are thrilled by the potential they see in each person. Their power comes from learning how to unleash it.

THE DEFINITION:

You begin by asking, "How can I move you to act?" In virtually every situation, your eye goes to the outcome. Whether you are in a long meeting at work, helping a colleague get work done, or talking a friend out of making a bad move, you measure your success by your ability to persuade others to do something they didn't necessarily intend to do. You may do this by the force of your arguments, your charm, or your ability to outwit them, or perhaps by some combination of all of these, but, regardless of your method, what really matters to you is moving other people to action. Why? Partly because you see where things will lead if they 'don't act, and partly because you are instinctively aware of momentum and so become frustrated when you bump into someone who slows your momentum down. But mostly because you just can't help it. It's simply fun for you to influence people's behavior through the power of your personality. It's challenging and mysterious and thrilling, and, in the end, of course, it makes good things happen.

How can I move
you to act?

YOU, AT YOUR MOST POWERFUL

In any situation, you set your sights on action. "What can we do?" This is your question.

You are, in general, impatient; but you are especially impatient when you know that a decision should be made. You see what will happen if we don't act. You see around the corner, and so it burns you to think about what inaction will cause.

Others feel you as persuasive. You engage with them directly and they are "convinced" by you. All of your relationships have this quality to them--you, moving others to act.

You are driven by the feeling of progress, and are acutely sensitive to momentum. You sense when it's building. When it's peaking. And when it's gone.

You listen well, but you listen for a reason; either so that people can talk themselves into a place where they are psychologically ready to act, or so that you hear which actions to take in order to propel them to make a decision. Listening, for you, is a precursor to action.

You can be a charmer, and are good at winning people over so that they like you. You do this because you know that people are willing to do more for those they like. Liking is a powerful (though not the only) precondition for getting the other person to make a decision.

You can be very direct. You feel strongly that problems are solved only when they are confronted head on. You are not interested in dancing around a subject. Instead you use conflict as your preferred method of resolution.

When you meet resistance, you become energized. You know you get better when people give you reasons why they can't act. Each reason is something for you to engage with, something you can grab onto and use to get them to see why making a decision is so necessary.

People sense your desire to move forward, and it comes across as self-assurance. Even confidence. Sometimes you might even put others off by challenging them more than you should--meaning "more than they would like to be challenged."

People realize that you have an agenda. And people like you most, indeed trust you most, when your agenda is clear.

THE DEFINITION:

You begin by asking, "What can they learn from this?"

Your focus is instinctively toward other people. Not their feelings, necessarily, but their understanding, their skills, and their performance. You see each person as a work in progress, and you are comfortable with this messiness.

You don't expect people to be perfect; in fact, you don't want them to be perfect. You see the possibility in imperfection. You know that imperfection creates choice, and that choice leads to learning. Since you are energized by 'others' growth, you look for signs of it. "Where was this person last month?" you ask yourself. "What measurable progress have I seen?" You create novel ways to keep track of people's performance and celebrate with them when they reach new heights. You ask them a lot of questions to figure out what they know and what 'they don't, how they learn best, what is important to them, and what journey they are on. Only then can you join them at the appropriate level and in the appropriate way. Only then can you help them learn.

What can they learn from this?

YOU, AT YOUR MOST POWERFUL

People's performance improves when you're around. This is your greatest gift.

Instinctively people know that you care about them, and that your caring is genuine. They get it. They feel it. They never doubt it. And this certainty frees them. They can experiment, and reach, and fall, and fail, and then reach again. And you will still be there willing them to keep reaching.

You don't give up on people. No matter how much they struggle, you keep believing that they will find a way to move forward, and to improve.

You are intrigued by "the process"--the process of other people's learning and growth. You aren't impatiently waiting for the big-bang breakthrough. Instead you are content to see small increments of growth that happen every day. The "getting it" can be more exciting to you than the "got it."

You are also intrigued by the process of the activity. You revel in breaking activities down into their discrete parts, and then showing others how to do each discrete part. You want others to understand the "how," the "method," and when you can show others the "how," you are delighted. This, in your view, is where the real learning happens.

You give other people choices. You allow them to make their own decisions. You realize that choice is the mechanism for learning, for growth. You say, "You decide, then come back and tell me what you decided, and why." You are a natural delegator.

You know that people can learn only from where they are starting, so you ask lots of questions to determine their starting point. You listen very carefully. You watch closely. Any small action or reaction could be a clue about where to "join" them in their learning journey.

Your "start-by-listening" approach makes others feel heard, and safe. For you, it is the source of vital information about their learning styles, their personalities, their understanding. You use this information to tailor what you are teaching so that it fits each person--you individualize.

You want to get on people's level. You want to engage in their world, see people in their "natural habitats," and better understand their realities. This achieves three things: 1) it shows them that you know them; 2) it shows you the world from their perspective; 3) it gives you the raw material you need to give them good ideas for how to get better.

ROLE 2

TEACHER

You are a learner yourself. Because you love the process of "getting it," you sign yourself up for classes so that you can feel yourself "getting it." This is a constant part of your life.

Your dedication to constant learning is not just for you. It also serves to equip you with new ideas and techniques that you can use to help others. Consequently, to others you seem wise, an unending source of knowledge, experiments, and ideas that might help them grow.

Whenever others run dry--of ideas, or of self-belief--they return to you. You seem strong, patient, understanding, and yet always expectant.

Combine your Roles. Sharpen your edge.

You're the kick in the pants that compels us to contribute our very best.

In this section of the report, your top two Roles are combined to give you even more specific advice on how you can win at work. You'll learn your greatest value to your team, suggestions on your career advantage, and get individualized content on how you can be more successful in the workplace.

PHRASES TO DESCRIBE YOURSELF:

-  "I've found that I'm more decisive than most people. And more impatient. I like to move fast."
-  "I'm at my best when I'm challenged to persuade someone to do something they didn't necessarily intend to do."
-  "I initiate a lot. I'm always telling my colleagues what they should do. I suppose sometimes I might push too much, but we always get a lot done."
-  "I hate playing politics. I'm a very upfront person and don't function well in a world with a lot of 'behind the scenes' action."
-  "I like listening to people tell me what they do and how they do it."
-  "I'm a constant learner. For me there's something energizing about the process of getting to a point where I excel in a new skill. Recently I took classes to learn how to..."
-  "I like getting into the "nitty gritty" with people, seeing the world through their eyes. Customers, colleagues, friends--I think I can truly help them only if I have seen their perspectives."

Your Career Advantage

Certain of your faith in us, you'll constantly raise the bar.

You are a direct and forthright coach who will never let us rest on our laurels. Certain of your faith in us, you'll constantly raise the bar. "You really think this is the best you can do?!" And yet you're not a mere cajoler, berating us from the sidelines. Instead you want to draw on your own expertise to help us. You are thrilled to be the one who offers us the secret trick, the new technique or the mind-flipping insight that gives us a new understanding. You are an assertive, challenging, one-on-one coach. For example, if physical fitness is your interest, you will be an excellent personal trainer as you push us hard, harder than we would push ourselves. If you are drawn to healthcare, you will make a superb occupational therapist, or rehabilitation specialist, someone who has to keep up the pressure to learn or re-learn physical skills that might, initially, cause us pain. If you're drawn to money matters, you should think about becoming a financial advisor or money manager--we know you want us to learn, and we know you want us to act, and this combination is compelling. In business, you have a classic sales leader profile--you really, really want us to win, and you'll never let us off the hook.

HOW TO MAKE AN IMMEDIATE IMPACT...

You are instinctively impatient. To ensure that this doesn't rub your new colleagues the wrong way, pick a roadblock that everyone agrees on and volunteer to be the one to tackle it. For example, if there is something your team wants, but someone--a leader, a client, a colleague--has always stood in the way of getting it, then volunteer to make the call and make the ask. Perhaps you'll prove persuasive. Perhaps you won't. Either way, you'll have shown your nerve.

Initially, because you are so action-focused, people will wonder what your agenda is. So, to stop their wondering, be explicit with your teammates about it. Tell them your agenda. It doesn't really matter what your agenda is--it could be making the sale, stirring things up, or getting your way. What matters is that you are transparent about it. People don't mind persuasiveness. What they don't like is uncertainty.

Look for ways to measure your results. You will be energized by the "proof" of whether you're ahead or behind. You are always at your best when you know exactly where you stand.

You want to help others, but you have to earn this right. So begin with your student hat on. People like students. They like to be asked questions about how they do what they do, and they like to hear themselves talk about why it works. Listening shows respect. So be inquisitive and be seen to be inquisitive.

Find opportunities to feed people's words back to them. Describe what you've heard, and what you've come to understand about their work, and their process. Not only will you be able to test your understandings, you will also validate your new colleagues. They will appreciate this validation.

Accompany your new colleagues as they "sweep the floors." Spend time with them in their environment. Watch how they do their work and notice the details of their struggles and their successes. These real-world details will give you raw material when you start trying to help them navigate through their struggles, and achieve even greater success.

HOW TO TAKE YOUR PERFORMANCE TO THE NEXT LEVEL...

 You have an agenda. Okay. We know that about you. We get it. And we certainly value your transparency about it. But, if you want us to rally around your agenda, tie your agenda to a mission, a purpose, a set of values, a better future, something that is bigger than you, something that can include all of us. Paint this picture for us, make it genuine, and we will make so much more happen for you.

 Yes, you can be competitive. And, no, you're not a good loser--why would you ever want to get good at that? Can you now take this competitive spirit beyond a mere win/lose framework, into an outcome where both parties feel that they've won? If you put your mind to it you can be the architect of these win/win outcomes. All it will take from you is the discipline of stopping, for a long moment, to consider the world through the eyes of the other person, or team. Take the time to do this.

 Learn to separate the small things you do to spread goodwill--the gifts, the remembered birthdays, the special favors--from the actual "ask." People want to like you and, because you are excited and exciting, they want to do as you ask. But they don't want to be manipulated. So show others that you are thinking about them all the time--a note here, an interesting article there--and then, later, give them a compelling challenge to act. This will be felt as influence rather than manipulation.

 Keep learning. Keep researching your subject. Attend the cutting-edge conferences. Read the expert posts. Make this a priority.

 Become an overt champion of others. Discipline yourself to reach across the organization and place people whose raw talent you have spotted into positions of real responsibility. Some will say, "But they're not ready." Don't shy away from this "risk." Instead, celebrate it. You are a genius at giving people just the kind of responsibility they need, at just the time when they need it.

 When you champion talent, make sure your explanations for why this is the right person, the right responsibility, and the right time, are vivid and detailed. Become adept at describing the strengths you have seen in a person, and why you think these strengths will translate to the new, larger responsibility. Be equally detailed about what specific knowledge people lack, and how you propose they go about acquiring this knowledge, without jeopardizing their ability to deliver results--this detail

WHAT TO WATCH OUT FOR...

When you make a mistake, or hurt someone's feelings--and you will; with your need to move people to act, it is inevitable--be sure to apologize.

What's wonderful about you is that mistakes and hurt feelings rarely derail you. You chalk it up to experience and then move on. What's not so great is that 'you may have moved on so quickly that you've forgotten to be contrite. What feels like momentum to you feels like disrespect to others. You may never do this naturally--stopping to apologize feels like "stalling"--so learn a couple of phrases you can say when it's clear you've pushed too hard or too fast. "How can I make this right for you?" is a good one. As is the classic, "I'm sorry."

Stay in the real world. Trust the details you notice. You are such an avid reader and researcher you can sometimes be intrigued, and even swayed, by other people's theories. While some of these theories may be sound, always rely on your own real-world learning as your guide.

HOW TO WIN AS A LEADER...

Your strength is your momentum. You see, you decide, you act, you move. Us. Forward. You're on a ride, and we take the ride with you.

Your strength is your faith in our potential. We never sense frustration with our struggles but rather a deep belief that we can keep experimenting, and keep getting better. You accept us; and yet your expectations motivate us.

HOW TO WIN AS A MANAGER...

Your strength is your ability to persuade me. To decide. To overcome an obstacle. To act out the courage of my convictions.

Your strength is how seriously you take my learning. And since you take it so seriously, since you pay it so much attention, I am inspired to do the same.

HOW TO WIN IN CLIENT SERVICES...

Your strength is that you make things happen, even if it means confronting a difficult obstacle.

Your strength is that you help me discover something new about my situation.

HOW TO WIN IN SALES...

Your strength is your conviction. Your beliefs inspire passive clients to make a decision, to take a step, to make something happen.

Your strength is your understanding. Your rich perspective on how each client is unique enables you to adapt your offering to serve each of them better.
